I often transfer files from my Mac to my iPhone, as these become clogged and too full to carry around. However, as the files are not already organised in folders, when I plug in my External HDD, my phone will create a folder and (in some cases) a sub-folder inside this (containing the file). This means that my external HDD now contains 1/2 as much data as my phone, and has only file names, without folders to define them. I'm forced to search and delete every file, and re-transfer it, one file at a time. Is there a simple program I can run on my Mac (such as OSX elfinder) that will only transfer files, not folders?
