The technology can be applied to all aspects of the game, including the ball - which moves a whole lot faster this season and spins more intelligently - creating more opportunities for players to take advantage of. Every ball movement is now smarter than ever before. In addition to letting players be more fluid, quicker to react and better at anticipating the ball, the enhanced ball physics are also capable of adapting to any number of different pitches, fields or weather conditions - including indoor or outdoor, as well as adapting to the pitch's natural contours and irregularities. The overall goal of the FIFA technology is to make the player the centre of attention and to create a more lively and entertaining style of football. Because of this, the gameplay remains grounded in providing a more authentic football experience. "The new ball physics are a real game changer," added Oliver Biermann, Senior Development Director at EA SPORTS FIFA. "We're finally able to offer players a more authentic and interactive football experience." Features:

- Intuitive pass options
- Glitchless passes
- Greater ball control and passing precision
- More intuitive goalkeeper AI
- Slick animations
- More intelligent dribbling
- Fast, accurate ball control
- Slicker passing animations
- Better cut-backs
- Slicker slide tackles
- More realistic balance and muscle tension
- Faster, harder-hitting shots and more realistic off-sides

New Pass Options:

- While keeping the core mechanics of the game the same, new pass options now account for constraints like defender or goalkeeper interference. Players can exploit this added level of complexity, giving them new ways to cut through the opposition when passing. They can also fool the opposing defenders, creating gaps to make dangerous passes.
- New passes are contextual based on the game situation and with respect to team affiliation. The outcome of the pass can change in response to the team's location, positioning, speed and the player's positioning. For example, if the attacker receives the ball from the wing, but his team is positioned in the centre with the defence dropping deep, he can use the defender to create space to play the pass.
- The player can now more easily drop the back line to play the ball behind and around the back line, although the timing of the pass has to be very precise.

Also, going long is
