It is up to you to defeat the dangers of an evil dictator, the evil Council of Councillors, the fanatical enemy brutes, as well as humans, zombies, robots, and more. This game takes a more serious, darker, serious approach to the Heroes Quest series and has many different paths leading to defeat of the villain, Chance. This game has many different pathways to victory, making this more of a RPG game as well as a Side Scroller Action/Adventure game. So check out the Game Hero by Chance trailer and gameplay video here: Hero of a Thousand Words is moving towards completion at this point. It is on track for release around the same time as Hero of a Thousand Words: City of Gold and should be released on the same day. I've been going over the different phrases that are in Hero of a Thousand Words and I'm figuring out how and where to put them in the game. I'll need a lot of feedback from you guys for the best in the game. Additions to Hero of a Thousand Words: -Character selection screen including dress to wear -Different outfits, shops, and equipment -Ability to use weapons from Hero of a Thousand Words: City of Gold at this point Currently, I'm thinking of adding a rewards screen, room for a journal, and a day/night system. There will be maps and paths so this seems like a good place to have them for now. -Finish up crafting and equipment screens -Hints and tutorials at this point -Shop skins/cards -Ship information screen -Mission objective description screens (for quests with no name) -Briefing screen for missions -Event happening screen -Briefing screen for events

-Entering into a new area -Resting for a while -Weapon and armor upgrades -Locked doors -Greatly expanded items for your collection -Objectives that have been completed -Hints for the game I've created a background, character creation screen, a plot line for the game, title screen, and a weapons menu screen for the game. All the artwork for the game is done. This just means the art is done and I'm going over each part of d41b202975

What's new in Hero By Chance:

' and it's a bit of luck. It's a chance, and you don't know to what purpose, it's a chance. You see, everything is a chance.'

*Peter Simonds, _Ray Mears' Northern Exposure_ : I decided to spend a year in the north of Scotland and came across a book on Tain. I read a few pages and thought, 'I could do that'. It was true. I could do it. Then I went to the _Tain_ - very tired, very wet - and it was `there'.

*Mary Two-Brains, _Morrowind_ : You seem to be interested in materials, ruins and other people's lives rather than your own. You're out of your time and yet you're not - unless you define your own time. You seem to be living and working here, but you don't really inhabit it. Is this a big part of Tain? Peter Simonds: I remember the first time I stepped into Braemar. There was this incredible scent of peat, that scent of otherness. Then I knew, definitely, that it was the place for me. I had no proof, no foreknowledge of anything. I just knew that. I remember walking around the back, along a hill, and walking through tunnels... I'd like to use that. Morrowind is a glimpse of the north of Scotland. Mary Two-Brains: And what about the 'other'? Peter Simonds: Well, I'm out of my time and I don't think about time too much. I hear Caithness and these places around Caithness. You know, but I don't know really where these places are. I do know that they are connected with Braemar and Lennach. You meet people and they talk about them, but they're not real. They're in your head but they're not quite real. I know a land is a country that is past everything and now. Mary Two-Brains: I think it is a very recognizable visual element to The Long Winter, the entrance to the halls. Peter Simonds: That made sense. We were working on things which were very familiar to Scotland - Braemar and Loch Eilt, Falls of Clyde, Sutherland and some of the most wonderful places in Scotland which are Stonehaven and Harris. We
