The book 'Mathematical Finance for Bankers' is published by Cambridge University Press (CUP) and focuses on various topics in mathematical finance, such as evolution equations, options, stochastic control, and portfolio theory. The book also discusses the theoretical and practical topics of modelling complex financial markets, the factors influencing financial crises of 2007–2008, real estate bubbles, and the use of simulation in financial markets. Examples include the Black-Scholes model, the BSM model, GBM options pricing, discrete-time and continuous-time Black-Scholes models, Black's formula for the asset pricing model, the variance gamma model, implied volatility, and the Black-Scholes and binomial lattice models. The book is well written, easy to read, and accessible to non-mathematical readers. The main aim of the book is to provide a comprehensive and consistent account of the mathematical theories of financial modelling and the applications of these theories in risk management of financial institutions. It has been published under a Creative Commons licence and can be freely downloaded, shared, and used, with the conditions that it is redistributed without any cost to the user, and that the user does not use the material for any commercial purpose. Hey everyone, The pathfinder background from the patch notes of yesterday got on my nerves. It raised some questions. Shouldn't you be a little more patient when you can't open all the cabinets and rattle around inside when you try to find that special item you need to get ready for battle? Also, do the idea really come to you from that picture? No, you don't need to be a graphic artist to write interesting text. Anyway, here are some more of my cur
