To explore the relationship between three variables: vaccination against HPV, Pap smear results, and the patient's own perception of his or her own screening behaviour. We contacted female patients, aged 30-65, who had been referred to an HPV screening clinic and who had been offered vaccination against HPV. A total of 809 answered a questionnaire comprising five questions about their initial screening behaviour as well as questions about their HPV vaccine acceptance, Pap smear results, and perception of their own screening behaviour. The results were analysed using the logistic regression analysis. 53.7% of the women who completed the questionnaire had been vaccinated, while 24.5% had a positive Pap smear result. A total of 21.9% had a positive Pap e79caf774b

I have a shield, shield basher and a character painting I am halfway done with, which I'm going to send the painter. This is the shield I've already started: I'm going to paint the shield black and then the blue in a cross pattern on top of it. Then the painter will darken the blue and the red parts of the shield. Can anyone help me figure out how to lighten a blue without going too dark? I have a black plastic toy frog that I painted as a test and it turned out ok (not sure how to lighten the colors on it yet), but everything on the shield is a bit hard to see. I figure I need to lighten the colors I put on there to make them easier to see, but I'm not sure how. If you look at the miniature on the left, you should see the shield floating in mid-air. But you can't see the colors below it, because the lighting is different. So, you need to use a piece of white paper, transfer the colours onto it, and then cut out the piece you will be painting onto. I just went through this with my shield, and I used a white copy of the miniature on top of the parchment paper. I was able to see both the parchment and the shield as I went over them, using a value knife to cut away the parchment. A friend of mine gave me a Dragonforge book that is very helpful, and it is called How to Paint Miniatures. It's very helpful with everything you need to know.Anisotropy of the thermal conductivity of a graphene-based superlattice. We compute the lattice thermal conductivity of graphene-based superlattices (GBSLs), via a realistic tight-binding calculation. Our results for an infinite superlattice in the ballistic regime are in good agreement with several previous theoretical predictions. We show that the anisotropy of the thermal conductivity
