Download the Windows Software. Wilcom Online Mail 1. 2. The product includes the embedded HASP tool software. Wilcom Embroidery. The invention is directed to a method and apparatus for removal of precipitate from a purified liquid containing copper within a gas phase, which can be used, for example, in a method of treating a recycled aqueous solution containing copper obtained by removing precipitate from copper-containing water. Methods and apparatus of this type are frequently used to remove the precipitate from copper-containing solutions, especially water, contained in a circuit, for example a water-cooling circuit or circulating-water system, or in a mine. In the past, many such circuits have been provided with devices that permitted the removal of the precipitate from the solution, and subsequent recycling of the solution, while maintaining the copper in solution and preventing it from leaving the circuit with the precipitate. U.S. Pat. No. 4,476,299 shows a method of removing sediment from a brine and returning it to a cooling tower, in which the sediment is separated from the brine, the brine is concentrated, and the concentrated brine is applied to the cooling tower. U.S. Pat. No. 4,339,420 is directed to a method of removal of the copper precipitate from a cooling water system. First, the system is provided with a precipitate removal and recycling system. The water is screened first in a trap, which is followed by a cartridge filter and a check valve. The filtered, concentrated water is returned to the cooling tower. U.S. Pat.

No. 4,465,527 is directed to a method of purifying the water from a cooling circuit. After the water has passed through the cooling coils, it is concentrated and filtered, and the filtered, concentrated water is returned to the cooling circuit. U.S. Pat. No. 4,365,939 is directed to an apparatus for removing precipitate from the cooling water, the apparatus comprising a brine skimmer in a cooling tower. A first filter removes the precipitate, and then the water containing a controlled amount of precipitate flows into a second, self-clogging, cartridge filter to remove the copper from the solution. U.S. Pat. No. 4,355,870 is directed to an apparatus for removing copper from cooling water. The cooling water flows directly from the cooling coils into a reservoir. A portion of the cooling water

Relationship between trabecular microarchitecture and load-bearing capacity: a finite-element analysis. To compare the mechanical behavior of bovine trabecular bone and endochondral bone, the biphasic and hyperelastic kinematics of three-dimensional FEA models of human radii and metacarpals were simulated in ten steps from 0 to 4 MPa axial compressive load. For hyperelastic FEA, both the shear modulus (G) and Poisson's ratio (ν) were set to 1.0. For biphasic FEA, the strain energy density function (SEDF) was defined for trabecular bone and endochondral bone, respectively. Each SEDF consisted of a two-phase formulation of a monomeric (endotenic) phase and a polymeric (osseous) phase. Fractal parameters (fractal-dimension estimates [D]; box-counting-estimates [N; L]) and averaged diameter (D_{av}) of samples from cadaveric forearms and from whole radii were used to define an equivalent trabecular bone structure as a benchmark. A balanced trabecular bone structure was obtained by averaging the fractal parameters of heterogeneous samples (N approximately equal to 3.5-5; L approximately equal to 300-700 nm). The radius/metacarpal models were subjected to 4 MPa axial load. The upper-end of the hyperelastic FEA curves for the radius/metacarpal
