President Barack Obama said he was "alarmed and disappointed" by the decision to reopen the camp. The decision was announced on Tuesday morning, hours after top military commanders told Congress they should remain closed. One former detainee at Guantanamo Bay, Moazzam Begg, said his release was unlikely. The UK-based human rights activist was released five years ago, but has been detained again at Bagram, a US air base in Afghanistan, since last month. His comments came after a visit to the camp by the US president to make a statement on the decision to reopen the facility. In a televised statement, Mr Obama said he was "working around the clock to close" Guantanamo Bay, but was "concerned that this morning's announcement may have created a perception of a lack of confidence in that approach". "[The] long-term solution... lies in addressing the politics and the policy that underlie our continued reliance on this detention facility," he said. He said it would cost millions of dollars to keep the facility open in the long term, and he was "concerned about the impact on our national security and on the delicate US-Afghan relationship." 'Open and
