

The tech enables FIFA 22 to capture the game in a whole new way. Players will experience a deeper connection with the game and play at a higher level because of the features, such as more aggressive reactions, more player movements, fluid passing and shooting accuracy. "The evolution of virtual players into on-screen action is an important step towards creating more realistic game experiences in FIFA," said David Rutter, Senior Producer on FIFA. "We are excited to be able to use this technology to create more dynamic gameplay, and to bring to life players and clubs that we can't possibly represent on the pitch." One of the key areas to which the new technology will be applied is on-ball actions, where the player is the key element. The new AI will react to a player's actions on the ball and will exhibit more aggressive and intelligent behaviours. The system will deliver its best efforts to make the best decision based on the stats of the situation. The game also introduces a new '2.0' AI and ball physics system, which increases the responsiveness and responsiveness of the ball, while decreasing the exaggerated level of movement in the past game. New free kicks also use new 'Free Kick Precision Tackles', which allow free kickers to take a shot on goal by moving forwards with the ball and guiding it in a specific direction. FIFA 22 will also feature a revamped goalkeepers' AI, which will give each goalkeepers their own personality. That will lead to more dynamic goalkeeper-side challenges, and for teams to have a different experience in 1v1 situations. FIFA 22 will also feature significantly improved online game modes. FIFA Ultimate Team online leagues and games will see the introduction of two new modes: Seasons and Master League. The 'Seasons' mode allows players to build a season that lasts six months and the 'Master League' allows players to compete in a full single season. There is also the introduction of Leagues for FUT on consoles and mobile. This allows players to unlock additional features and rewards by playing as well as collecting FUT points from wins and letting players play as their real-life club. There is also a new Training Mode that focuses on the single best
