You may want to wait for a fixed.The effect of epoetin treatment on hematologic and quality of life measures in patients with non-dialysis dependent chronic kidney disease. Anemia of chronic disease (ACD) is common in patients with non-dialysis dependent CKD (NDCKD) and is associated with erythropoietin (EPO)-resistant anemia. Other studies suggest that erythropoiesis-stimulating agent (ESA) therapy may decrease mortality in patients with NDCKD. Little is known about the effect of treatment on quality of life (QOL) in this population. Thus, the objective of this study was to evaluate the effect of erythropoiesis-stimulating agent therapy on hematologic parameters in patients with NDCKD, and then assess the impact of these changes on QOL. In a prospective, observational study, 55 patients with NDCKD were treated with ESA. QOL and hematologic parameters were assessed at baseline and 3-6 months after initiation of treatment. At baseline, erythropoietin resistance index (RRI) was greater than 1.5 in 24 patients (43%), anemia was present in 41 (74%) and 46 patients (84%) had a decreased creatinine clearance (CCr). At 3-6 months of treatment, 41 patients completed the QOL assessment, and ESA dose had been increased in 37 (90%). Baseline RRI correlated significantly with 3-6 months of treatment increases in hemoglobin, serum creatinine, and 1-year CCr. Baseline anemia was associated with 3-6 months of treatment increases in hemoglobin, serum creatinine, and 1-year CCr. In contrast, baseline CCr was not significantly associated with 3-6 months of treatment changes in hemoglobin or serum creatinine. At 3-6 months of treatment, increases in hemoglobin, serum creatinine and CCr were associated with improved functional status, decreased fatigue, decreased depressed mood and increased appetite. ESA treatment resulted in a marked increase in hemoglobin in the majority of patients with NDCKD and increased serum creatinine
