Displaced fractures of the distal humeral shaft: a retrospective study of outcomes and complications. Displaced fractures of the distal humeral shaft remain a difficult management problem. Although most have anatomic or acceptable alignment, approximately one-quarter are malaligned. This study examines the long-term functional outcomes of these fractures and the complications. Medical records were reviewed for operative treatment of a total of 50 displaced fractures of the distal humeral shaft (types AO 22-A3.2) at a mean of 49 months (range, 24-78 mo) after injury. Patients completed a questionnaire to assess pain, functional outcome, ability to return to previous activity, and complications. Pain was rated on a scale from 0 (no pain) to 10 (extreme pain). Thirty-eight patients were available for follow-up, and the scores for function and ability to return to previous activity were: pain, 4.8 and 5.0
