but, no matter how i tried, it was impossible for me to make the child-girl understand that, if she's just a man, she's not allowed to live in the forest. she refused to leave, even if i pulled her hair, using all the force i could, so i was forced to give her the beating of her life. she came to, and slowly understood what i was telling her. - no.. i don't want to leave. - she muttered. owl, the girl i found in the forest is more intelligent than you. she understood the word "magic" when i showed it to her, but she wouldn't understand the word "child-girl" because it didn't exist in her language. that's because she's not a child-girl anymore; she's a real girl, with a name, and she came to the forest seeking a book of magic so that she can become a grown-up girl. once alice was thirsty, she saw a little spring. the way to it was through a heavy wood, and she was longing to get to that spring, when she suddenly heard birds chirping there. taken by surprise, alice didn't know what to do, so she just stood still. and she waited. and she waited. then the birds began to eat the berries from a tree nearby, and alice understood that they were birds. she understood that they were berries, too. so she took a few berries and began eating them, too. the best thing about being the mayor of a medieval city, other than the size of the town and the luxury of being the lord/lady of the surrounding country, is the fact that for around 30 days every year, you can go on holiday. you get to choose where to go. you don't need to think about any of the things that you normally need to think about when trying to escape the city - your family, your business, your court case and your everyday duties. all those things take care of themselves - as you are in a strange and interesting place, you don't have to worry about anything else except enjoying yourself.
