Technological advances in IC materials and design have produced generations of ICs where each generation has smaller and more complex circuits than the previous generation. In the course of IC evolution, functional density (i.e., the number of interconnected devices per chip area) has generally increased while geometry size (i.e., the smallest component (or line) that can be created using a fabrication process) has decreased. This scaling down process generally provides benefits by increasing production efficiency and lowering associated costs. Such scaling down has also increased the complexity of processing and manufacturing ICs and, for these advances to be realized, similar developments in IC processing and manufacturing are needed. For example, a three dimensional transistor, such as a fin-like field-effect transistor (FinFET), has been introduced to replace a planar transistor. Although existing FinFET devices and methods of fabricating FinFET devices have been generally adequate for their intended purposes, they have not been entirely satisfactory in all respects.Childhood Pick's disease: clinical, cognitive, and pathology observations. The clinical presentation, neuropsychological characteristics, and pathological profile of a group of 17 patients with Pick's disease is reported. The clinical picture can be divided into three broad categories. The first group of patients (n = 13) had progressive, stereotyped onset and was characterized by slow deterioration with frequent reversion to a premorbid state. The second group (n = 2) had either a progressive (n = 1) or nonprogressive (n = 1) onset and had a more severe course of illness. The third group (n = 2) had nonprogressive onset and a chronic course of illness. The majority of patients had premorbid personality, with predominantly social personality disturbance. Neuropsychological profiles revealed deficits on tests of visual perception and semantic and perceptual memory, together with an impairment in frontal lobe function. (Don't get me started on the Clinton's!) Seriously, "those white folks" is pretty much all you've been hearing about lately from the show "Cosby Show". And "those white folks" is not the same as "some white folks." Because there are some (most, actually) white people who are just fine and dandy and none of your business and not all of "those white folks" are anything like "those black folks." The thing is, though, there are some black folks (I'm thinking about both the good ones and the bad ones) who are not like "those white folks." "Those white folks" is nothing like some of us black folks. There are so many ways to be black and so many ways to live black lives that it is almost impossible to fit every person who is black into a type of life and make every life type fit into a race.
