Some women who have had a hysterectomy for benign reasons, such as a fibroid (a non-cancerous tumor of a muscle or gland), still have ovaries. Some women with a hysterectomy who have ovaries are also menopausal. Others who have a hysterectomy, but retain their ovaries, are pre-menopausal. Still others who have a hysterectomy and retain their ovaries are in the menopausal transition, which is a transitional state between menstruation and the permanent loss of menstruation. Fibroids are non-cancerous growths of connective tissue that develop in the uterus. Many women get fibroids during pregnancy, and many do not have any symptoms when they occur. As the uterus shrinks after menopause, the fibroids can become quite large. They may become painful or cause problems such as irregular menstruation. Many women with fibroids get relief from surgery to remove them. Click here for more information on fibroids. Read more about the treatment of fibroids. Read more about hysterectomy and fibroids. The hysterectomy and bilateral salpingo-oophorectomy (BSO) are the most common type of hysterectomy. This procedure is used to treat fibroids, remove the uterus and also remove one or both ovaries.
