Garmin is trying to get more people into photography with its new smartphone-friendly, new action camera. The Garmin Instinct and Instinct Plus are meant to bridge the gap between a point-and-shoot camera and a dedicated action camera. However, compared to the GoPro action cameras, one of the Instinct's biggest hurdles is its imaging sensors. In an attempt to bridge that gap, Garmin has teamed up with Adobe to give the Instinct images that a GoPro would be proud of, as well as the look and feel of a point-and-shoot with a clear viewfinder. These are the sticker replies. They help Adobe Photoshop define what it can do, so you understand how it relates to the rest of Photoshop when working with text layers. With Photoshop it's harder to read. You can choose from the sticker values the reviewer provided. It assigns colors to them that are also used for the layers on top. That's a plus, because you don't have to know the order of the layers when you try to match the colors in Photoshop. One of the great new features in adobe Photoshop is the ability to animate your layers. You can animate a shape layer, a layer with a stroke and a text layer all in one video sequence. Once you have a script for it all you do is begin the process in the timeline. The file manager window does not work if you have an adjustable font. An easy way to correct this is by resetting the settings back to what comes in a Photoshop template. It is a pretty basic screen, but none the less it is cool.
