Photoshop is my all-time favorite photo editing software. But from version 5 until the current version, I had some issues with performance regarding operation times. Despite this, Photoshop CS6 has been my favorite version up till date. Not only does it offer fast responsiveness, its defining feature is how well it translates into other user mediums. Photoshop also has a nice complement in Bridge, an application which can bridge images and sort them into folders. Plugins are built with Photoshop's scripting language. They function in a similar way to Windows applications, and they can be found under "User" > "Versions." Lightroom is managed by Lightroom, a single application rather than having multiple applications and plugins. This is why it is easier to navigate and use than a more complicated Photoshop library. I will quote the bestseller about it here: "If you tried to make a piece of cake using a chainsaw, you'd still end up with a cake!" This is for the key features and not the average Photoshop user. But if you are a Photoshop power user, you have definitely earned your money, don't you think?
